The BrightPath philosophy

BrightPath Active Learning engages kindergarten-age children in challenging and meaningful learning experiences using the environment, nature and physical activity as a forum for learning. Children are outdoors, exploring nature and at the same time actively learning about literacy, math, science and themselves.

BrightPath is not a nature school, but rather uses nature as a forum for instruction. Children have an inherent fascination with nature and the world around them and our experienced teachers turn the interest, curiosity and youthful energy of children into an exciting educational environment. Children can apply their own creativity, thoughts and interests to their experiences in nature and our talented teachers use these as learning opportunities and lessons for the children to build the math, literacy, science and social studies skills required in kindergarten.

BrightPath complements and enriches a traditional kindergarten classroom program. By removing the typical classroom boundaries and constraints, nature and the environment around us provide an outstanding forum to broaden a child's learning experiences — personally, socially, physically and academically.

BrightPath's unique approach to learning helps children build a stronger foundation for success in their continued education. Your child's enthusiasm for learning from the world around them will be second nature.

Education beyond academics

Not only do we enhance a child's academic foundation, our goal is to also enhance a child's physical health, social skills, character and personal maturity. Our program weaves character messages throughout our time with the children. Time will be spent on activities, games and exercises that include aspects of social responsibility that might include the environment, protecting nature, personal and social responsibility.
